

ANNA.

NORTHEASTERN JOURNALISM STUDENT & FASHION INTERN IN NYC

March 21, 2010

Go Green Expo

The logo for Go Green Expo features a green recycling symbol (three chasing arrows forming a triangle) to the left of the text "greenexpo" in a lowercase, green, sans-serif font.

Today I went to the Go Green Expo at Pier 92 and learned about a lot of cool eco-friendly vendors. I was at the event for work purposes (I'm helping plan an eco-friendly fashion show/charity event in April and we were looking for sponsors), but it ended up being really fun.

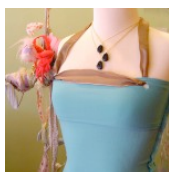

Here are some of the amazing vendors I came across:

Boho Magazine – a green fashion and lifestyle magazine printed on 100% recycled paper with recycled ink and packaging. Their current issue is all about Parisian style. It's a splurge at $6 per issue at the newsstands, but isn't reducing your carbon footprint worth the extra $2? bohomag.com.

Dropps – These pre-measured dissolvable “dropps” are filled with eco-friendly laundry detergent. As a college student who has to lug laundry up and down the stairs every weekend, these things are like lifesavers. Anyone else find carrying around a giant jug of detergent annoying? A pack of 20 costs $7. dropps.com.

Kelly Lane - Kelly Lane is an eco-friendly clothing line with a ton of stylish work-friendly options. kellylanedesign.com.

Little Kay Gardens - This company was showing one of my favorite products of the day: recycled flowering gift wrap. Wrap your gift in the pretty paper, then after it's unwrapped it can be planted and will grow wildflowers within five days. littlekaygardens.com.

What do you think? Do you know of any cool “green” products? If so, please share!

Click here to see Go Green Expo on Anna blog