Go Green Expo: The Post-Mortem

I am sure by this point that all of you are all a bit tired of hearing about trade shows and expos. Believe me, my feet are tired of attending them....but, we do want to share some deets with you on the Go Green Expo we just attended in NYC this past weekend.

Here are a few highlights:

Did you know there was a waterless toothbrush? We didn't either until Lindsey Lohan's mom was showcasing one. It's called Aquafree...we didn't realize that Dina was so eco!

We also learned about a great new product called Schrapps. It is fabric gift wrap that comes in numerous sizes. You eliminate tons of trash and they are reusable. Great for large families who continually share gifts amongst one another. Will save you tons of cash! Frankly, I also love to put them in my hair and use as a headband, and Lauren ties them to her luggage so her black suitcase is distinguishable at baggage claim!

More of what we learned...

The technology in reusable water bottles has gotten so stellar that you can keep ice in certain brands for up to 80 hours. Seriously...

Sports clubs are starting to use the power you generate when riding the bike or using the rowing machine to create power. Burn baby burn!

Hand sanitizers are no longer smelly and drying. They actually moisturize! So long Purell...

Larabar has a new flavor that took me back to my past...peanut butter and jelly.

We learned about eco-sex from author Stefanie Weiss.

And last but not least, we learned that Lauren and I can drag over 100 lbs of luggage (see picture) ten New York blocks if another mini marathon ever happens to shut down half the streets in Manhattan...

But I'm not bitter....
